UNIVERSITIES AS PLACES OF ENCOUNTER

The first sounds of Russian war drums were beating when the last newsletter went to print. Since then, we have witnessed the unjustified attack by the Russian Federation on Ukraine, its peoples and its institutions. FUCE stands in solidarity with the students and staff of Federation member the Catholic University of Ukraine.

It is important in times like these to come together as institutions of higher education with values grounded in human rights, social justice and democracy to stand up for these values and freedoms.

The members of FUCE will stand ready to assist the Catholic University of Ukraine on the path of rebuilding and recovery as soon as it is possible.

The Ukrainian Archbishop-Metropolitan of Philadelphia, the Most Reverend Borys Gudziak, addressed the recent IFCU General Assembly and appealed to all our members to continue to pray for Ukraine, to counter the disinformation about the war and above all to offer whatever practical assistance is possible at this time and in the rebuilding of the University of Lviv in the future.

The critical situation in Ukraine will be a key element of our forthcoming General Assembly which takes place in the Catholic University of Our Lady of Good Counsel in Tirana, Albania 20-22 October 2022. The conference will explore some themes of the Global Compact on Education.

Pope Francis consigns the message of the representatives of religions to Deputy Director-General for Education at UNESCO Stefania Giannini.

In particular, catholic universities as places as of encounter and welcome for people from different cultural and religious traditions as well as catholic universities as promoters of peace, dialogue and solidarity. The General Assembly will draw on the experience of catholic universities in Ukraine, Lebanon, Albania and others in recent times.

In launching the Global Compact on Education, Pope Francis spoke of the need to "unite our efforts in a broad educational alliance, to form mature individuals capable of overcoming division and antagonism, and to restore the fabric of relationships for the sake of a more fraternal humanity." This objective can only be achieved by envisioning sound economics, politics, growth and development built on the foundation of a sound anthropology, a new humanism and service.

The General Assembly in Tirana will provide us with the opportunity to reflect and engage more deeply with the commitments of the Compact and how these might best be implemented in the particular contexts and challenges which our institutions face.

At the General Assembly, delayed six months due to the pandemic, delegates will elect a new President and board of FUCE for the coming three years. I wish to express my deep gratitude to all the members of the board for their wisdom, guidance and support over the last three challenging years. In particular, I wish to salute Prof Therese Lebrun and Fr Nuno da Silva Gonçalves sj for their significant contribution to the board.

Finally, congratulations to all the teachers & students who participated in person in our summer school programme, European Humanism in the Making, which returned to the LUMSA campus in Gubbio.

The summer school which attracts students with leadership skills from across Europe (from Ireland to Georgia), reflected on the European project in its various dimensions. Twenty-five students attended and reported how much they valued the summer school as an enriching experience. They also appreciated the multicultural exchange with open-minded persons from various religious, cultural and national traditions and the personal interaction with the teachers

This year's public lecture during the summer school A Propos Medea: From Global Europe to Post-Europe and Back, was delivered by IFCU President Prof Isabel Capelo Gil, Rector of the Catholic University of Portugal and President of IFCU.

With the support of Erasmus funding, the summer school will be more sustainable into the future. We are exploring the prospect of an institutional 'home' for the programme with the resources to continually develop and expand module content in response to new developments and challenges for Europe, such as the war in Ukraine. I encourage all members of the Federation to promote this valuable programme among their students and to recognise the credits which are awarded on successfully completing the module.

Look forward to meeting you soon in Tirana in October!

JOHN PAUL II CAMPUS DEDICATED

On 8th June 2022 the academic community of the Pontifical University of John Paul II gathered at the University Library for the ceremony of the dedication and blessing of the grounds for the John Paul II Campus. The new campus includes a modern and functional complex for the library building and a newly constructed academic building. The campus courtyard, with its monument to St John Paul II at its centre, links the entrance areas of both buildings. Advanced technologies and a trigeneration system will make the building energy positive in that it will be able to produce more energy than it consumes. Students on the new campus will deepen their knowledge and search for wisdom and learn how to make peace among people and be guided by love in their lives.

GREAT MINDS GATHER IN GUBBIO

by Barbara Segart, Scientific Coordinator, at the University Centre Saint-Ignatius Antwerp

We were happy to meet again on the campus in Gubbio, Italy, and enjoy the hospitality of LUMSA University after two years of absence due to Corona.

Twenty-five students from 11 countries (Spain, Portugal, Ireland, France, Belgium, Croatia, Slovakia, Albania, Georgia, Ukraine and Lebanon) and 14 FUCE member institutes participated. They were enrolled in bachelor programmes on theology, history, literature, languages and cultural studies, sociology, political science and international relations, economics, management and communication and educational studies.

Once more, a very talented and highly committed group gathered to reflect on the reality of Europe and their contribution to shaping its future. Some of them voiced their opinions in the public panel debate MyEurope .

The core teachers' team was joined by the President of the International Federation of Catholic Universities, Professor Isabel Capelo Gil, who presented a public lecture on global and post-Europe. Her lecture can be found on www.ucsia.org.

The programme offered by the team of coordinators appealed to the students as seen in some of their reflections on the school:

"Reuniting in Gubbio, Italy, with different people, cultures, backgrounds, experiences, but with common values, created a multicultural exchange capable of envisaging Europe in the making from various disciplinary perspectives."

"Bringing together many realities and how this may be tangible to everyday life."

"Making us fully aware of what European humanism is and what is at stake."

"Rethinking certain values, acquisition of new knowledge and the formation of our European position."

"This program has allowed us to understand the contemporary issues we will have to face and the importance of being an advocate for a dynamic and humane Europe."

"The programme achieved its aims with the examination of European humanism and the role we can play in its construction, as students."

"While teaching the history of Europe and presenting its values, this summer school contributed to building a real European consciousness."

The encounter with peers from other countries, facilitated by specific interactive work formats, proved as important as the course programme itself, as students testify:

"The summer school has created a safe and open environment for constructive discussions aimed at learning and sharing and being able to talk about our own realities."

"It has helped me to open my mind by meeting people from other countries and avoid many prejudices about foreigners from different countries (in this sense it has been very nice to meet people from Lebanon, far away in distance but culturally and mentally close to Europe)."

"The programme achieved its aim because our extensive discussions about our respective views and experience as Europeans and non-Europeans allowed us to become more humanist towards one another."

"I think that the course has helped us to know the different points of view that one can have on the same subject depending on the place in the world where you were born."

"I learned new information and was able to rethink my attitude to certain issues."

This proves how the learning outcomes are as much about building social skills and moral attitudes as about knowledge acquisition, as the students themselves recognise:

"It is a program of exchange and sharing. It is a very enriching program on a personal and professional level."

"It is an opportunity that opens your eyes to other realities and makes you get to know more than just your country and your comfort zone."

"I feel like I left this week with a greater sense of humanity, I became more aware of other realities, totally different from my day to day life. This doesn't have to do so much with the courses in itself, but with the contact I had with people from all corners of the world."

"I learnt how to listen properly to other people, learn about their different cultures, but also how to respect and appreciate the beautiful diversity we have in this world. So, I enjoyed conducting a reflection on what it really means to be a human being in all its changeability. "

European reality, with its subsequent crises, the Ukraine war being the latest, can be harsh, but should not discourage the new generation, as they state themselves:

"The topic of war and the different kinds of war is so interesting to debate. Depending on the country, our sensitivity to these issues is different since some have never experienced this situation while others discover it in their country."

"I have realised how much the EU strives to achieve its goals, even if sometimes it doesn't reach them or only partially meets them."

"I learned that the points of view on Europe were quite different among the younger generations, that Europe is fragile, but that Europe is beautiful."

RESILIENCE AS SOLIDARITY: RUNNING A UNIVERSITY IN TIME OF WAR

by Sofiya Opatska &
Volodymyr Turchynovskyy

#StandwithUkraine 🇺🇦

There are two things we in Ukraine are preoccupied most these days: victory in the war and the future reconstruction and transformation of Ukraine. We want to share a few reflections which are shaped by these two major concerns which define our present day thinking, decision making, actions, communications, fighting, and praying.

On February 24th I was woken up by another Vice Rector of UCU, dissident Myroslav Marynovych at 4:30 with the words "Sophia wake up. War has started." I cannot imagine how Myroslav felt after his life story - being for 10 years in Gulags, witnessing the collapse of the Soviet Union and the rebirth of imperial Russia.

HORRIFIC REALITY

Solidarity in Practice

From the first days of war, every Ukrainian - including young students in the University - was focused on helping other people to survive. Over the four months of the war, UCU collected $3.44 million for humanitarian aid. Most of the funds were spent on medical supplies for hospitals and people in the combat zone. Approximately 10% of the money was spent to support internally displaced people, 9% on protective and safety equipment for our soldiers, and 7% on food aid.

A huge number of initiatives were developed at UCU campus and among UCU Alumni. UCU Business school alumni started around 60 various initiatives. A group of UCU students has been involved in organising work at a shelter for people who have lost their homes. The shelter was established on the premises of the UCU Faculty of Theology and Philosophy at the start of the war. In its first three months, the shelter accepted 340 people, the majority of whom were people with disabilities and members of their families. It was the only shelter of this type in Lviv city.

Curriculum Revisited

A number of courses shifted focus to persuading international companies to leave the Russian market for ethical reasons. As a result of using this service learning approach, both students and community benefited. As defined by Robert Sigmon, "service learning occurs when there is a balance between learning goals and service outcomes, each enhances the other for all participants".

In our case, we showed how to build a service approach that can help educational institutions in the context of short-term disruption and crises to continue fulfilling the primary role - educating students and also increasing the social impact and making education more meaningful for students.

A Moral Combat

A free society is a moral achievement which cannot be achieved once and for all and forever. It requires everyone's effort and commitment. It's a kind of moral victory which is expected of everyone and all of us at all times. What is unfolding in Ukraine is a moral and spiritual combat for freedom and dignity. This is why our moral victory is of such importance for Ukraine, for Europe and for the world.

We as the university community are in this combat. This is the time for us to be authentically what we are and who we are in standing for what is true, good and holy. This is the source of our resilience and the hope for the future.

Security Reconsidered

During these most dramatic trials for the Ukrainian people our perception of security has been evolving. It has shifted from 'nothing bad will ever happen to me' to a more mature 'whatever terrible thing might happen I'll be embraced by a network of solidarity and prayer'.

Security in the war time resides within the interpersonal network of solidarity, sacrifice, friendship, love and prayer. As never before, our sense of security is connected with awareness of standing on the side of what is good and just. In the times of insecurity and multiplying uncertainties to firmly stand for the right and noble causes makes you feel more secure from a spiritual viewpoint.

To put it in some simple words: whenever security doesn't feel secure it's because we succeeded in corrupting our relationships. This is why we are convinced our future also badly needs a new ethical infrastructure as well as a solidarity infrastructure. All three contours of the ethical, solidarity and security infrastructures are beginning to reveal themselves amidst the blood, pain and suffering of the war.

Security in the war time resides within the interpersonal network of solidarity, sacrifice, friendship, love and prayer.

A Gift of Sacrifice

The new sense of normality we are experiencing during the war is related to the ultimacy of sacrifice along with its mysterious, life-giving and edifying power. At time of writing, we aware of eight people being killed on the front lines who belonged to the UCU family (whether as students, alumni or the close family members of our employees).

The university campuses continue to remain under a threat of deadly missile attacks and bombardments by Russian forces. On Friday, July 15 at least 10 Russian missiles hit two universities in the southern city of Mykolaiv. This is just but one sad case in a terrifying series of strikes aimed at the Ukrainian universities since the February 24 invasion.

We firmly believe that the ultimate sacrifices made by our UCU colleagues, echoed by so many members of Ukrainian academia, are life and future-giving. The ultimacy and generosity of these gifts are meant to protect and to celebrate the beauty, richness and fullness of the lives of the many.

NEW CHAIR AT UCLY

The Catholic University of Lyon has created a University Chair dedicated to 'vulnerabilities'. The new chair is intended to be a laboratory for the ideas and practices which embody the intellectual specificity of UCLy.

With the ambition of communicating with society, the new chair leads a plural and interdisciplinary reflection, calling upon multiple competences and experiences. It promotes cooperation between researchers and practitioners and takes into account the many faces of increasing vulnerability in the contemporary world: from socio-economic to political crises, through to the emergence of the climate change.

It is in this spirit of openness, collaboration and societal commitment that the Chair regularly organises symposiums, research days and conferences. Two events took place in 2021-2022: the inaugural multidisciplinary colloquium (October 8th, 2021) on the theme 'vulnerabilities: from the theoretical framework to the practical issues', and the first of the UCLy Days (May 12th and 13th, 2022) which was open to the general public and promoted debate on the universal dimension of vulnerabilities.

A UNIQUE INTERNATIONAL LEARNING EXPERIENCE

Universidad CEU San Pablo offers both graduate and undergraduate students a unique opportunity to enjoy an international learning experience from their own classroom by working with universities and other entities abroad on Collaborative Online International Learning (COIL) projects and mirror lectures. The programmes are the product of collaborative work with international institutions, and they are integrated into the syllabus in a selection of courses. Through innovative case studies and challenges, students acquire the necessary competencies for analysis, critical thinking, and the development of solutions to social problems, from a global and multi-cultural approach, in line with the university's international commitment and values.

GLOBAL EUROPE: IDENTITY AND NARRATION

by Isabel Capeloa Gil, Rector UCP/President IFCU

Stories and narratives, shape our understanding of the world. They both reflect and produce a mindset. They organise the performance of identity, both individual and collective. In short, stories are ‘acts of meaning’.

Europe is shaped by shared stories that convey a sense of belonging, connoting the multiple struggles that over millennia have produced peace and dissent, the values aggregating the personalist and humanist values of integrity, justice, solidarity, care, the right to a dignified living. These shared stories also display the violence and the wars that throughout our far from perfect history have constructed a European allegiance to the rule of law, democracy, freedom of religion, freedom of speech – very basically to the right to have rights.

Stories, then, not only reassure us of who we are, but, as acts of meaning, they allow us to reflect critically on the processes that have shaped our becoming. One of the current concerns in European discourse (political, social and cultural) is – again – the question of who the European is? Who belongs in the narrative? Who is allowed to produce the story and shape its representation? Does Europe continue to be Europe if it encompasses the flows of global diaspora? Should the very formulation of Europe become global – ‘global Europe’? Or is Europe the driver for all global ills, guilty of spreading modernity’s four horsemen of apocalypse: colonialism, slavery, imperialism, capitalism?

The arguments reflect a struggle over the imagination of Europe.

Over the story told and over difference. And if cultural difference is what defines the existence of culture itself, it is also crucial to understand that this is a concept anchored on division and strife, just as Europe is.

The imagination of Europe has been historically built around the construction of borders. A geography of limits articulated the imperial discourse of Rome from myth to politics. Rome's founding myth, the story of Romulus and Remus, enunciates the violence that both structures and protects a demarcation practice.

The process of culture begins with the setting of boundaries, and it is precisely at the border, the savage and unhomely space of the limes, that culture is ultimately affirmed.

Arguably, the border produces both the empire and the philosophical idea of Europe. Becoming occurs in limine. Consequently, the space that substantiates and co-produces the idea of Europe only becomes what it purports to be at the edge, when the limits are reached. One might say that Europe becomes Europe in Lampedusa and Callais.

Becoming in limine, on the cusp of the line of demarcation, the idea of Europe is informed by the boundary, and it is immersed in its vernacular hybridity and untidiness. Hence, Europe is not, if not in the face of its contestation. The limits that produce its identity are precisely the porous opening convoking its dissolution. Europe is thus revealed to be a tensional figure, that is never done with being undone. In fact, a figure that retrieves its rhetorical strength from the ever-present perspective of demise.

In this sense, Europe is the yardstick to a reverse rhetoric of potentiality, arguably addressing both the suggestion of unrealised possibilities, inspired by the unfulfilled actions of the past, and the very possibility of never being so. A rhetorical redoing of Europe must address the two figures of impotentiality, the refugee and the migrant. Antagonising the fixity of the border, they choose 'not to do', doing away with limits, specifically those of the State, and citizenship, just as they potentially transform the structures that produce the cultural, religious, and ethnical boundaries for those within.

If Europe, as Massimo Cacciari claims, is not until it reaches the extreme (Cacciari, 2016:58), the refugee is perhaps the phenomenological extreme that will, once again, force Europe to be what it has always been, a space of mobility, exchange, translation, adaptation, disruption. A space of passage, encounter, and recognition. And this is precisely the social, cultural, and historical context from where European humanism grows, as a process of renewal founded on a dialogical, processual, and critical encounter with the past. This critical encounter that lies at the root of European humanism is what makes it a powerful proposal for the renewal of our runaway present.
